What makes a good parent-
By Meitav Mozes, 7th grade, Hebrew speakers.

When I'll have children, I would want them to be good children- to be nice to everyone, to help their friends and family, not to be rude...

Every day, after school, when my children will come back from school, I'll give them lunch, ask them how their day was, and help them to do their homework and to learn for tests. I want my children to do all their homework they have on the first day, even if it's not for tomorrow...

After they'll do all their homework I'll let them do whatever they want: to go to friends, to see movies, to read, to go to the park...

Then they'll eat dinner, take a shower, read a little and go to sleep.

Every Shabat we'll go to the synagogue, and after the meal we'll sit together and learn the portion of the week. Then they'll go to sleep. In the morning they'll go to the synagogue and eat the meal. After the meal they can do whatever they want to do and at the right time, they'll go to Bney-Akiva.

Once a month, on Rosh- Chodesh, I'll take them to a nice place for dinner and I'll buy everyone a little present- what they'll want, if it's not too expensive...

And, of-course, I'll educate them to love the Torah and the Mitzvot, and to be nice to everyone!!
