

Being A Good Parent: By: Kayla Heimowitz

I think that every <sup>parent</sup> is good in one way or another. Some just need a little help how to show it. I also think that all children need some discipline but not by screaming, for example: your toddler runs into the street, you can quickly scream at him to stop but for the long lecture don't scream at him in front of everyone in the street but take him to the side and explain to him patiently how dangerous what he did was. Every child needs to do chores but don't be too hard on him.

If your child doesn't want to finish the food on his plate don't yell at him but "trick" him into eating it, for example: tell him: "Don't you want to grow big and strong like your older brother. If something like this doesn't work just tell him: "No treats later" and that will most likely get him to eat.

The worst thing for a child is to have a parent who promises something and breaks it.

If you want a happy relationship with your child never do that.

You are the example to your child of what it is to be a "grown up", live up to that name.
